The Diana F+ is designed to capture pictures on 120 film, which is 6 centimeters in width. Compare that to 35mm film which is of course 35mm in width; about a little over half of the width of 120 film. The image reaching the back of the camera, using 120 film, will sort of look like what you see in the viewfinder.

The Diana F+ has 4 settings: 'sunny', 'slightly cloudy', 'cloudy' and 'pinhole'. Again, because it is easy to underexpose photographs with this camera, I suggest using a setting bellow what you would normally use. This means that unless you are under a very bright sun, you should use the 'slightly cloudy' setting.
