As a 3rd person narrative, the individuals in Mozart's life are usually described in inanimate terms, as though they are merely card board cut outs. No one, other than Mozart's father, seems to have any kind of personality or human emotion...they just are.
This gives the book its dry texture and makes it seem longer than it actually is.

The truth is, Mozart was a genius with a gross, scatological sense of humor, a complete inability to handle money, and a life filled with tragedy, loss, and suffering right up to his dying moments.
